When home is at the fair

PLEASANTON — County Fairs are a nice place to visit but children traveling with parents who work the fair circuit find living on fairgrounds a combination of fun, boredom and loneliness.

Terry Baker, 11, said there wasn't anything he really disliked about fairground life. He is currently with the Alameda County Fair.

"But if a fair runs a long time I kind of get tired of it."

Terry said he had thought about "doing other stuff" but liked traveling with his "Dad."

Since he was two years old, Terry has been traveling with his father, Jerry. Baker owns

Fun for a youngster, but it's lonely two "Dog House" concession stands.

Terry said, "In the summer we do fairs in California and Arizona. We used to go other places but they were too far away."

Terry is living on the Pleasanton fairgrounds in a motor home with his father and stepmother, Patty, he said.

During the winter he stays with his mother and attends school.

For entertainment at fairs, Terry said he mostly "just walks around, helps Dad with light chores, sees shows and watches the horse races."

He said once in a while he plays games with other kids who live on the fairgrounds.

"I have gotten to know a lot of the people who work the fair since the same ones travel the circuit all the time."

Terry admitted to eating "too much junk food" except when his father can get him to eat the balanced meals with vegetables. Patty fixes for them.

His usual bedtime is 1 a.m., he said.

The cops are after the Moonies

DUBLIN — "Permit?" The bespectacled young man in the brown plaid shirt pointed to his laminated name tag.

"Unification Church," it said over his name and a color photo apparently taken when he was about 30 pounds heavier.

He was selling giant sticks of chewing gum to "raise money for Christian missionaries," he said, hustling from one shopper to another in the K-Mart parking lot off Dublin Boulevard.

Asked again for his peddling permit, Chuck, as his nametag labeled him, said, "It's in my car, over there," pointing vaguely in the direction of a nearby gas station; then, "If you want to check with the police, it's on file with them."

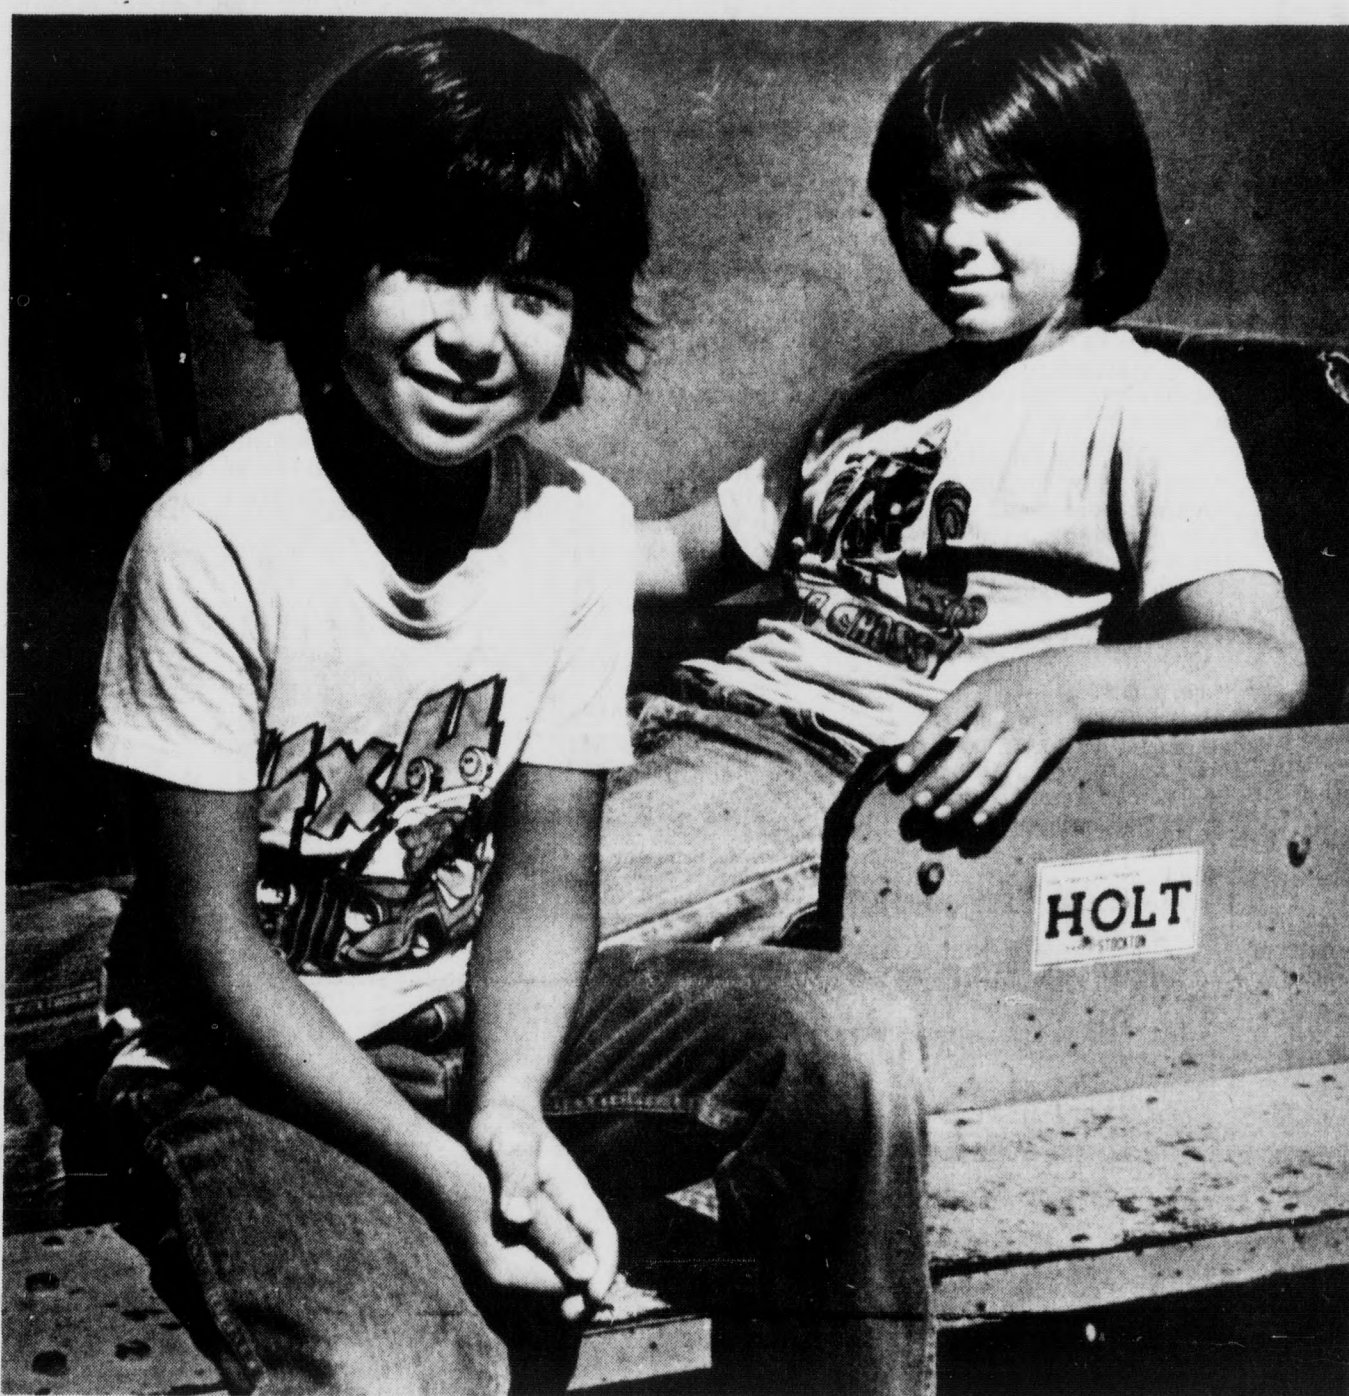

Actually, a check with the Alameda County Sheriff's Department revealed that not only was Chuck unlicensed to sell in Dublin—as was another member of the Rev. Sun Moon's Unification Church, a pretty dark-haired young woman selling gum in the Payless parking lot a mile away—but deputies were about to pounce on the pair.

Deputy John Quinn said, "It only costs $5 for a peddling permit good for a whole year and the Unification Church is entitled to a permit. But they don't want to do it."

"They sent us a letter a month ago from San Francisco, saying that if we didn't respond they would feel free to solicit here."

"I responded to it, telling them how to get a permit. We didn't hear from them again, and now the roof is caving in all over me!"

Rod Goss, left, and Terry Baker not only get to visit the Alameda County Fair, they live there.

Drinking ban

New weapon against cruising in Pleasanton

PLEASANTON — Police will sweep the streets with an emergency ordinance passed by city council this week that bans drinking in public.

The new law, a reaction to floods of teens and young adults clogging main Street from Thursday through Saturday, went into effect yesterday morning.

It bars drinking anywhere in view of the general public, including streets, sidewalks, passageways, parks, playgrounds, public property or private property "which has been approved for commercial or industrial use."

Homes and backyards are spared. Exceptions are allowed for local businesses with "on-sale" licenses like the Cheese Factory and Pleasanton Hotel, where liquor is drunk on the porch and patio during regular business hours.

Buildings rented from the city for private affairs, like wedding receptions at Century House, will be excluded as well, as long as the city's recreation department okays the application.

Permits for exceptions to the ordinance will be issued by the city's chief of police following a rigid set of guidelines.

City council members and the police were flooded with calls over the weekend following a rash of "cruising" on Main Street.

Up to 500 people — mainly teenagers and young adults — jammed the downtown thoroughfare from Bernal Avenue to Amador Valley High School.

Acting police chief Capt. Ron Nelson said the bulk of the cars were imports from neighboring towns. Crackdowns in Livermore, Walnut Creek and San Leandro sent the kids and their cars to Pleasanton.

"They pushed us, and we're going to start pushing back a little," he said.

Local parents were angry when 89 juveniles were brought in for allegedly violating the city's 10 p.m. curfew.

The parents reportedly complained of police harassment while merchants and would-be shoppers shouted protests at council members.

"The parents should walk up one side of Main Street some Friday or Saturday night and ask themselves if they want their kids there," councilman Frank Brandes said.

In all, 108 citations were issued Friday and Saturday nights for drinking, loitering and littering. Twenty-three were juveniles.

Police said the ordinance will let them clean up the downtown parking lots where the crowds congregate after meeting on the Main.

Walnut Creek earlier this year began barricading its Main Street at 9 p.m.

City clamps freeze on housing

PLEASANTON — Would-be developers can pocket their housing plans. The city won't accept them anymore.

City council this week passed an emergency ordinance that cuts off all tentative maps and minor subdivision filings not in the city's hands by Monday afternoon.

The new code followed a late Monday night executive session and became effective Tuesday morning.

The freeze will bar all potential developments until the city's Growth Management Plan is completed and a system of "points" worked out to award sewer hookups to developers.

Planning director Bob Harris will return with a list of projects in progress and a recommendation of potential exemptions.

Council passed the emergency ordinance on a 4-0 vote with councilman Bill Herlihy absent.

The ordinance drew strong opposition from a trio of local landowners and workers, and sparked a minor controversy over the use of executive session to consider the law.

Pleasanton campus cop faces trial

HAYWARD — A Pleasanton man has been held to answer in superior court to charges he murdered two fellow campus patrolmen at Cal State Hayward's patrol office May 30.

Fred Moreno, 39, of Maywood Court pleaded innocent to charges he shot Sgt. Stanley Henney, 41, and Gary Hart, 25, following a heated argument concerning back-up assistance.

Defense attorney James L. Crew argued that Moreno's bail should be reduced from the $150,000 set by Judge Alfred A. Delucchi. The judge denied the motion based on the severity of the charges.

Moreno is scheduled to appear July 11 in department 11 of Alameda County Superior Court.

Dry conditions

Fireworks are out this July 4th

Alameda County Bureau

OAKLAND — The county ban on fireworks sales and use was upheld yesterday, amid a display of the supervisors' own dazzling fireworks.

It was not exactly a heavenly show, as two supervisors engaged in the theatrics of vote switching, but the final result left supervisors Valerie Raymond of Livermore and Joseph Bort of Castro Valley very happy for the tinder dry terrain of their districts' anxious residents.

Supervisors voted 3-1 to continue the state of emergency which forbids the sale and use of fireworks.

Raymond and Bort were joined by Charles Santana of Hayward, who two weeks ago voted against the ban while John George was voting for it.

But George switched his vote yesterday and Raymond and Bort looked glum because they lost their third vote.

Then a fire captain from the unincorporated area near Hayward made an impassioned plea for the ban and Santana, a former fireman, became the third vote.

Supervisor Fred Cooper of Alameda abstained in the voting as he has all along.

One pitch for the ban came from sheriff's department director of safety Howard Garrigan, who lives in Pleasanton.

He said the drought is so bad this year that the county fire department will park tanker trucks in the fire prone canyons of Castro Valley during the July 4 holiday for the first time in history.

In addition, all firemen's vacations during that time have been cancelled.

Politics and religion in county fair

Representatives of the John Birch Society and Hare Krishna, organizations with divergent thrusts but engendering some controversy, have returned to the Alameda County Fairgrounds in Pleasanton.

While the presence of the Birch Society booth in the Fairgrounds' Exhibition Hall has stirred spasmic interest, little of it negative or overtly hostile, the Krishna members have gained grudging access to the grounds.

The latter came onto the grounds unannounced during the 1975 Fair. When confronted by the County Fair Association administration, the religious sect at one point threatened to go to court to assure continued access for the purpose of soliciting funds.

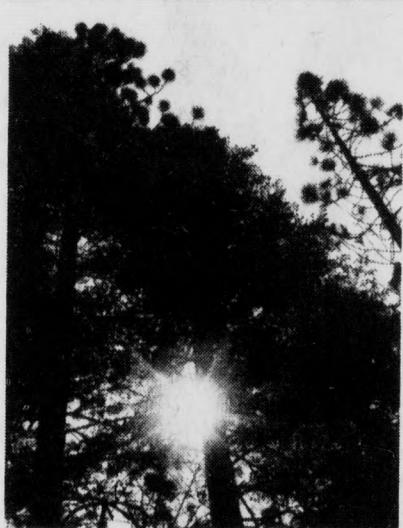

As Fair Association secretary-manager Lee Hall reiterated Tuesday, the sect's presence on the grounds is founded by the First Amendment.

Hall said political organizations aside from the Birch Society have utilized the Fairgrounds in the past. This marks the fifth year, according to staff members in the Birch informational booth, the ultra-conservative society has been represented at the Alameda County Fair.

Determination of what organizations may purchase space in Fair buildings is the domain of the County Fair Association Board of Directors. However, day-to-day matters such as contracting are handled by Marilyn Fraser at the Fair administration building.

Exhibitors of the previous year are given preference for booth space. Determination of what organizations may occupy the various indoor and outdoor areas is handled by Mrs. Fraser, a well-known Fair-time employee who also works with the Maid of Alameda County Pageant.

Supervisors OK budget

Alameda County Supervisors voted 4-0 to approve the staff's proposed $440.5 million budget for the fiscal year which begins Friday. However, supervisors will have more shots at the document in the next month or so because it was only preliminary approval yesterday.

As supervisor Joseph Bort said, "It's our version of the Legislature covering the clock."

Fair fetes seniors

Today at the Alameda County Fair in Pleasanton it's Senior Citizen Day, along with Berkeley and San Leandro days.

It's also half-price Family Night after 5 p.m.

Gates open at 10 a.m. this morning for the fourth day of the fair.

Attendance was at 15,536 Monday, below expectations, but larger crowds are expected.

House votes for B-1

The House voted yesterday to put the controversial B-1 bomber into production. President Carter is expected to announce his opinion on the issue Thursday.

Carter had spoken against the B-1 throughout his campaign, yet recent statements from The White House indicate he is leaning towards favoring the $100-million-plus bomber.

Opponents say the plane will be obsolete when it hits the air in the late 1980s. Proponents say the B-1 is needed and will be a bargaining point in the SALT talks.

The proposed budget calls for $24.8 billion to be spent to produce 240 B-1s, out of a total $110.6 billion budget.

For details, see pg. 17

Mori checks I-580 job

Assemblyman Floyd Mori (D-Pleasanton) will tour the I-580 widening project Friday to determine the amount of progress made on the massive construction program.

The project is now scheduled to be completed in October, well ahead of original estimates.

Lawyers: new face on Madison Avenue

It's what's upfront that counts — and if you've got a good lawyer in front of the bench, it'll count for more in your lawsuit.

Nobody expects law firm sloganeering to sink to those depths, but attorneys will advertise their services now that the Supreme Court has given its blessing to the concept.

That's the word from Hyde, head of the Livermore-Amador Valley Bar Association.

Small firms can't afford big ad budgets, he says, but people respond to sales pitches, and attorneys will take advantage of the court's Monday ruling which makes advertising by lawyers permissible.

Careless kids

Witnesses said children with matches started a grass fire yesterday in Pleasanton that took six firefighters and three pieces of equipment nearly a full hour to extinguish and clean up. The 150 by 65 foot blaze was centered in the arroyo between Pleasanton Greens and the new Fiat dealership, near Vineyard Avenue. No injuries were reported as a result of the 1 p.m. fire.

Dublin complains of Moonies

A string of phone calls alerted the Sheriff's Department to the presence of the two Unification Church solicitors in Dublin. Several months ago, peddlers from the church had appeared in Livermore, then Pleasanton.

The youth in the K-Mart lot said he "did well" raising money by selling candy. He refused to say how much was raised in that fashion but some news reports have said one "Moonie" may raise as much as $250,000 a year, which all goes directly to the Rev. Moon except for subsistence allowances for the workers.

Chuck said he was from Florida, a member of the "MAT" — Mobile Assistance Team — which travels nationwide soliciting. He is currently working for the church's Berkeley headquarters and staying in Burlingame, he said.

"There's more persecution of the church in the Bay Area than anywhere else," he commented.

"But the Reverend Moon doesn't care. He knows that eventually people will see through all the lies."

Kids who travel the fair circuit

"I get up around 9 or 10 a.m.," he added. "After a while," Terry continued, "all fairs begin to look the same. And some days it's hard to find anything very interesting to do."

Rod Goss, 8, began traveling with his parents, Rick and Linda, this year. Before that he stayed with his grandmother.

His parents own a food concession stand that sells hot pastrami sandwiches, swiss steak, cokes and "other things," according to Rod.

"I get lonesome for my friends back where my grandmother lives," Rod admitted. "It's hard to find anyone here to play with."

He said he wasn't sure if he would be going back to his grandmother's town in the fall to attend school.

According to Rod, a good part of his day is spent walking around looking for someone to play with him. He also said his parents have him come around "very often" to let them know he's all right.

He said he earns spending money at his parents' stand by picking up trash and doing some sweeping.

The Goss family lives in a motor home. Rod claimed they rarely eat there but eat out a lot.

Bedtime for Rod is usual.

ly midnight, he declared. "I get up about 9 or 10 in the morning." Terry said he also reported his whereabouts during the day. Both boys were not allowed to visit certain areas of the fairgrounds, they said.

Temporary housing stop ruled

The "attorney-client" privilege extends to the city council, said city attorney Ken Scheidig, while he advises it on "potential liability" over possible litigation. The city's concerns are centered on Morrison Homes, a major Pleasanton developer who successfully sued the city in a fight over sewer connections.

Council emerged from executive session shortly before midnight to take testimony from landowners Robert McCloud and attorney Bill Hirst representing Chris Berattis, and local land surveyor Gil Barbee.

McCloud asked council to exempt his 79 acres at Bernad Avenue and Foothill Road. If he can't file a subdivision map to split the land into four 20-acre sites, he can't sell it, he argued.

The city, he said, promised him sewage and water when it annexed the land.

Hirst, a former Pleasanton City Attorney, said the ordinance "in a blatant fashion precludes filing any sort of land division" until it is "consistent with the yet to be developed growth plan."

Barbee, who surveys for small land divisions, pleaded for his livelihood.

The "Growth Management Plan" should be ready in mid-July.

Valley obituary

Joaquin Miner

Joaquin U. Miner, 78, a native of Guam and Dublin resident 11 years died Monday in an Oakland hospital. He had lived in California 65 years.

He was a veteran of World War I, World War II and the Korean conflict. He was a member of the Fleet Reserve in Livermore.

Surviving are his wife, Rita Miner of Dublin, sons, George Miner of San Ramon, Ben Miner of San Bruno, a brother, Timothy Miner of Manteca and eight grandchildren.

Recitation of the Holy Rosary will be held Wednesday, 8 p.m. at Graham Hitch Mortuary, 675 St. John Street, Pleasanton.

A Mass of Christian Burial will be Thursday at 9:30 a.m. at St. Raymond's Catholic Church, Shannon Avenue and San Ramon Road, Dublin. Following will be a burial at sea by the U.S. Navy.

Another pitfall, he predicts, is that large and wealthy law firms, like corporations, will dominate the advertising media while lawyers just starting out will be at a disadvantage.

A state poll recently showed California lawyers generally in favor of being allowed to advertise but leery of fee advertising.

The next step, according to Hyde, will probably be for individual state supreme courts to thrash out the details of the new law with the state bar associations. In California's case, a proposed program is being drawn up now to that end.

Senior Day at the fair, crowds starting slow

Senior citizens will be saluted today as the Alameda County Fair moves into its fourth day with continued sunny weather forecast.

Today is also Berkeley Day, San Leandro Day and the third in a series of half-price "Family Nights." All admissions after 5 p.m. will be half the regular $2 (adult) and 50 cents (children 6-15) prices.

Gates open at 10 a.m. with exhibits remaining open until 10. The carnival remains open past 10 at the discretion of Fair management.

Attendance Monday was below expectations, though more than twice that of last year's second-day crowd. However, horse racing was called off at the last minute on the second day last season, leading to a drastic drop in crowds and revenues.

Monday's total count of 15,536 included 6,874 at the race track for opening day. Sunday's count was 15,222. Crowds are expected to increase toward the 25,000 weekday estimate as the week wears on.

Cablevision Channel 10 will show highlights of the Maid of Alameda County Pageant and various exhibits on Thursday at 8 p.m.

Judging of swine entries is slated today from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the livestock area.

At noon, the popular Art-in-Action programs continue on the lawn area with Opal Lafferty, Jim Ingraham, Inger Korman, and Billie Babcock featured.

A special children's attraction, the Mitchell Marionettes, will perform on the lawn area at 1, 3 and 5 p.m. Dick Harward's working border collies perform at 1:30, 3:30 and 5:30 p.m.

The Berkeley Community is set for 2 p.m. and the San Leandro Community Hour at 5 p.m. in the Court of Four Seasons.

At 3:30 today, senior citizens will be honored in the Court of Four Seasons with a program featuring Ed Hennessy and accordionist Lou Jacklich.

Singer-guitarist Jose Feliciano opens a two-day stint tonight in the Amphitheatre with performances at 7 and 9. Feliciano is an internationally known artist who has produced many award winning songs.

An upcoming highlight will be Livermore Day Friday. The Fair runs through Sunday, July 10.

Pipeline forum set

A public forum designed by opponents of the Valley Pipeline to "give all sides a chance to debate that project" is going forward even if no proponents of that pipeline are willing to participate in the discussion.

Hugh Ellsaesser explained "we have invited each member of LAVWMA (Livermore Amador Valley Water Agency) and each has declined to participate, for one reason or another." Ellsaesser is one member of a hard-core group of opponents who have insisted that "there are better answers to the discharge of treated waste waters than that pipeline."

It is those alternatives which the ad hoc group hoped to test against LAVWMA's project in a full-blown discussion, July 13 at Granada Little Theater in Livermore.

"We'll be there even if the other side isn't," Ellsaesser said, then adding, "we still hope some advocate of the pipeline decides to participate."

Mayor Robert Philcox of Pleasanton, chairman of LAVWMA, advised The Times that he had no intention of "taking part in discussions set up by those who have no intention of listening to our side of the argument."

County work is a kick in the head

MARTINEZ — How would you like to work for the county? How would you like a punch in the nose?

Statistics released by Contra Costa County this week revealed that 162 county employees met with violence at the hands of angry distraught or desperate persons.

The Board of Supervisors have decided to do something about those injuries, and have approved a $1,200 contract with Program Consultant Associates to run a training program in the management of violence and assaultive behavior.

Twenty-five persons from county departments experiencing the most injuries have been attending a week-long class. Those trained will now hold two-day sessions for employees in their departments to prepare workers on how to handle potentially dangerous situations.

Almost half of the injuries reported last year — 74 were received by persons working for the county hospital and outpatient clinics, including mental health services.

One nurse was kicked in the head by a patient coming out of a semi-comatose state. Another was kicked in the chest by a violent heroin overdose patient. An alcoholic patient used his electric bed control to strike his nurse with the bed.

Some of the incidents reported to county officials read like scripts for television shows. One sheriff's deputy fell off a small bridge and the suspect with whom he was wrestling landed on top of him. Another deputy ran down a hill after an escaped felon, hit a barbed wire fence, flipped over six times and slammed into a tree. To capture yet another escaped felon, a deputy tried the old kick-in-the-door technique and hurt his leg.

Sheriff's deputies filed 46 injury reports from encounters while on duty. Many of them were attached by friends of persons being arrested causing bites, bruises, cuts, scratches and more serious injuries.

Probation employees are also in a high injury class. Some of those injuries came from trying to break up fights at Juvenile Hall. One employee was kicked in the chest by two girls scaling the playfield fence. Two employees received eye injuries from chemicals and plaster thrown at them.

Howard Brownson, county safety officer, said the violence may be due to people's attitude towards the establishment.

No reprieve offered CC water users

WALNUT CREEK — There's no letup on water rationing in sight for Contra Costa County residents.

One Southern Alameda County water district has eased rationing, but East Bay Municipal Utilities District, Central Contra Costa County's water supplier, says strict rationing will continue.

Nor will customers of the Contra Costa Water District be urged to use more water, as were customers of at least one other water district.

"We don't have any plans to lighten up our rationing program," Dave Vossbrink, an EBMUD spokesperson told The Times.

During the current drought the district has cut household water rations to 225 gallons per day and cut commercial users to a percentage of their previous year's total.

The utility serves Walnut Creek, the San Ramon Valley and the Lafayette area. The district was flooded with phone calls Monday after Alameda County Water District announced plans to scrap its mandatory rationing plan.

The southern Alameda County water district serves 61,000 homes in the Fremont, Newark, Union City area.

An end to rationing was simple arithmetic, Alameda County Water District Manager Matt Whitfield said. "Our people have been so good at saving water it was getting worrisome."

EBMUD isn't in such an enviable position, Vossbrink noted. That district has a different situation — some of their water comes from groundwater supplies, wells. It's just not the case here.

The southern Alameda County agency was the second to cut rationing. Last week, the San Francisco Water District announced that city customers could ease up on their cutbacks.

Water users in San Francisco have managed to cut back usage by 40 per cent, but the district only needed a 25 per cent cut. Now that district is urging citizens to use a little more water to at least keep their lawns from dying.

Contra Costa Water District, like EBMUD, has no plans for reducing rationing. "We've been very pleased with rationing so far, but we certainly don't have any water to give away," Craig Randall, president of the CCWD's board of directors said. So far, the CCWD customers have cut back to 70 per cent of last year's water use.

The CCWD serves Concord, parts of Pleasant Hill and Walnut Creek, Pacheco, Clayton, Martinez, Pittsburg and Antioch.

EBMUD is doing even better, with cutbacks averaging about 50 per cent last year's use.

The district can't afford to ease its rationing its rationing programs either, Vossbrink said. "The water we save this year is the water that might be vital to us next year."

Fight for more help on bench

Leshner News Bureau MARTINEZ — Special treatment shouldn't be given superior court judges' budget requests, the board of supervisors said Tuesday.

That decision was another installment in the saga of efforts by the judges to obtain two more judges.

Supervisor Robert Schroder, Walnut Creek, said he didn't want to embarrass the judges by turning down their request for special consideration, but he recommended the request be turned down anyway.

Schroder said if the judges' request for more help is considered before the county budget is reviewed by the board, other county departments will demand the same consideration.

Unwanted pets face death chamber

MARTINEZ — Unwanted animals in Contra Costa County may continue to be destroyed in a decompression chamber unless a painless, economical, effective drug can be found to do the job.

Each Wednesday, the Contra Costa County Board of Supervisors Internal Operations Committee listens to recommendations from interested citizens on this issue. They also discuss other matters related to animal control, according to Eric Hasseltine.

He is Contra Costa County's fifth district supervisor serving on the Internal Operations Committee. Supervisor Nancy C. Fahden, of the second district, also serves on the committee.

Hasseltine said some Concord residents had recommended the use of sodium pentobarbital in place of the decompression chamber method.

"Some points of the ordinance were good, others were controversial," Hasseltine indicated anything to do with animal control measures was infiltrated with emotionalism — understandably so, he said.

He stated the Internal Operations Committee would do their best to solve the many problems dealing with animal control.

"It turns out after further investigation there is a shortage of the drug and it takes trained personnel to administer the drug for it to be effective," Hasseltine said. "These factors make it expensive to use the drug. Some say it would take a vet to give the shots, or at least someone who has been properly trained by a vet."

Hasseltine said use of a nitrogen chamber had also been suggested. His committee would look into this possibility, he reported.

One group of citizens helped put together a new ordinance about dog breeding, Hasseltine said.

Wayside Weavers

Spinning up a storm with an ancient craft

Ann Scott of Livermore, who'll be soon, celebrating her 90th birthday soon, shows how to drop-spin the fleece into yarn. She started a couple of years ago in the craft, and hasn't stopped since

There's lots of myths floating around, usually bad press, about spinners and weavers.

The story of Sleeping Beauty, for instance. She pricked her finger on a spinning wheel and was out of circulation for one hundred years.

Or Rumpelstiltskin, the dirty old gnome who had a beautiful girl spinning gold while trying to guess his name.

Modern-day weavers and spinners, purveyors of a dying craft, are fond of telling happier tales about their hobby, while surrounded by piles of fleece and such.

Did you know, for example, that local weavers sometimes use rabbit fur to make soft, angora garments? (Did you ever wonder how long it would take a hard-working bunny to shed that much hair?)

Are you aware that California sheep, bless their hearts, usually don't have the quality wool that their Oregon brothers do?

And that, if you did decide to become a weaver, you may have to wait three years just to get your hands on a loom?

Even if you flunked those three questions, don't feel bad. Livermore's Wayside Weavers and Spinners, a group of about 20 happily fanatical women, still have a lot to learn themselves. Members get together, some with 200-year old spinning wheels, oohing and ahing about fleece and spindles and such, and doing wonderfully old-fashioned things like dyeing their yarns with marigolds and eucalyptus leaves.

They're all very much into the art, and gladly show newcomers what it's all about. And no matter how many times they have to explain things like "carding" (sort of combing out the wool) and "staples" (a strand of wool), they never seem to mind. It's a great art, rally. Where else can you sit, quietly, without using tons

Livermore artist Karen Yeager will show her works in ink and colored pencil drawings at the San Leandro Community Center Library, 300 Estudillo Ave., San Leandro.

The exhibit will continue from July 2 through 30, Monday to Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Yeager's works include abstracts, which she calls "thought forms," and flower studies from nature. She has also worked with photography for 15 years and various other media, including oils.

Members of the Livermore Art Association Gallery have planned a "Fun in the Park" day, Saturday, July 16. The event will take place in the park surrounding Carnegie Building on Fourth Street in Livermore. There will be demonstrations by artists and craftspeople who currently participate in the LAA gallery.

The activities have been scheduled to take place during regular gallery hours, from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

of electricity or wasting water/energy, without gaining weight even, and still be doing something productive?

"I know I'm doing work that really amounts to something," says 89-year-old Ann Scott of Livermore, a newcomer to the club.

But, warns, Jane Armstrong, it can be addictive. "You get involved and can't stop," she says. "Once you start spinning, you get into weaving and dyeing wools and..."

STAR WARS

If there are Philistines among you who would cast "Star Wars" as an expensive Flash Gordon flick, read no further. You're the same bunch who saw "The Godfather" as Elliott Ness in color.

As for the rest of us, we're hooked. How can you knock a movie that starts softly with, "A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away," and ends with an enraptured, unashamed, wildly cheering audience on its feet clamoring for more?

They're not calling for an encore from the projectionist, bud.

How can you rap a movie that's 30 per cent corn, 30 per cent funny, deadpan dialogue, and 40 per cent schmaltz when it has zero character development and a horribly simple plot?

You can't. You just love it.

Besides, the good guys win. For those hermits who have been hiding in Hindu temples and have missed hearing of the now infamous and alleged "plot," here it is.

It's about a beautiful princess captured by the bad guys who have taken over intergalactic space.

She gets rescued by the good guy — the boy next door farmer type — couple of robots that, presumably, would offend Anita Bryant, a fat headed mercenary, a walking carpet, and the most incredible, literally indescribable visual and audio effects ever presented.

Oh, yes. And a Jedi Knight, an intergalactic, existential Samurai played by Alec Guinness.

The bad guys, led by black draped, turncoat, intergalactic, existential Samurai Darth Vader and the sinuously evil Governor Tarkin, buy it in the end. Well, almost.

And now you know why director — writer George Lucas, whose "American Graffiti" is the 11th greatest grosser in film, got bounced from two studios when he presented his idea. Corn won't sell, they said. And neither would Disneyland.

Carrie Fisher, offspring of Eddie and best known for one line in "Shampoo," is the sharp tongued Princess Leia. She gets the best dialogue. Robots Artoo Detoo and See Threepio — Lucas has a lot of fun with names — steal a handful of hearts, while the towering Wookiee, Chewbacca, grunts his way to stardom.

Then there's Alec Guinness. Once upon a time, about 400 years ago, I advanced the philosophical theory that Nietzschean "superman" was prototyped in the Japanese Samurai.

I was right. But the steel sword is replaced with "light saber," a cauterizing cookie cutter. In the hands of a master — Obi-Wan Kenobi or the dread Darth Vader — it can be poetry in motion.

The visual effects can only be experienced. And as you do, grab onto your seat, because you, too, will fly X and Y and Tie fighters.

Ditto the sound.

Did Lucas make a mistake?

Yes. He should go back to the cutting room floor, pick up the pieces and turn it into a three hour epic. At least.

You think I'm kidding?

May the force be with you.

THE MIKADO

The kimonos bristle with tradition and pale faces bow low as the Mikado of Japan is carried by in a sedan chair. He looks awesome. Fierce. Even cruel. There are looks of dismay as the crowd is pushed back by masked guards.

Then the Mikado primly unfastens his safety belt — and the audience howls.

That's just one of the rib-ticklers in store for Gilbert and Sullivan lovers attending The Lamplighters latest hit at the Presentation Theatre in San Francisco.

Valley theatre-goers who were lucky enough to see the troupe's May 21 performance of "The Pirates of Penzance" at Amador High School won't want to miss "The Mikado" either.

The musical premiered June 25 and continues July 1-2, 8-10, 15-16, 22, 24, 29-30 and August 5-6. Located at 2350 Turk St. on San Francisco's west side, the theatre is small enough to provide excellent seating for everyone yet large enough to have good acoustics.

"The Mikado" is the story of a young minstrel, Nanki-poo (played by Baker Peeples), who is searching for his lost love Yum-Yum (Rosemary Bock). Cast in the lead roles are many familiar faces from the valley production of "Pirates."

Alas, Nanki-poo arrives in the village of Titipu only to discover that Yum-Yum is betrothed to marry the tailor Ko-Ko. When the unhappy young man discovers that Ko-Ko has just been given the esteemed post of Lord High Executioner, he utters a tongue-in-cheek remark that keeps the audience in stitches for a good five minutes: "Then my suit is hopeless."

As only Sir William Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan can do, the audience is soon embroiled — and loving it — in one mess of mistaken identities, rejected lovers and tangled affairs of state after another.

Such characters as the haughty Pooh-Bah — Lord High Everything Else — and Yum-Yum's sidekick Pitti-Sing (JoAnne Loarie) and Peep-Bo (Nina Hanson) help keep the entire production on a hilarious uneven keel.

Clever effects are added to the production with the practiced use of Japanese fans, and the simple set — just one pagoda and a few benches — is visually enhanced by choreography that blends the mincing steps of old Japan with the dramatic hairstyles and makeup of the cast.

Outstanding performances are put in by veteran Lamplighter Mary McMahon Brown, who is Nanki-poo's blighted love Katisha, and orchestra conductor/actor Gilbert Russak as Ko-Ko.

Need I say more? Don't miss it! — By Lucy Hobgood-Brown

New $tar
in art world

Some advice to aspiring artists in the area: stay away from success.

Look, for example, at what it's done to Robert Rauschenberg.

Rauschenberg, you may recall, is presently being touted as an American artistic genius, a man whose creativity and unlimited imagination, and guts, have put him on top in the art world.

He's the guy who took his bed quilt, spattered it with paint and turned it into a modern art classic called "Bed." He's also done blueprints of nude women, tire tracks in ceramic, and put a chicken on top of a pedestal like a Venus de Milo. In other words, he fears nothing.

Well, right now, he's probably in the place that every area artist dreams about: praised by critics, his things selling for untold fortunes and opening the biggest-ever retrospective of his works in the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art.

But don't turn your envy buttons up to "high" yet. Because if the show opening was any indication of what the life of a top-name artist is all about, then look out.

It was, very artistically speaking, a madhouse.

There were thousands in the gallery, lining up in a manner that only "Star Wars" could match, trying to get a peek at the works of art. They squeezed into the main room, where a big band played, with saxophone blaring. The visitors, understandably enough, were more interested in surveying each other than the exhibit.

The artist, meanwhile, tried to contend with hundreds of fans who wanted his signature on catalogues and posters. Even the most refined high-society types were as aggressive as street gangs at that point — after paying $25 for a poster, they were well aware that the artist's John Hancock would increase the value an untold number of times. And nobody, but nobody, was going to let that kind of opportunity get away.

Drinks flowed everywhere. There were hand-woven silk gowns and gold-lame jeans and enough see-through blouses to keep most of the men clearly interested in what was walking around the floors rather than what was on the walls.

A couple of punks even showed up. No, those aren't typical rowdy teenagers, but that new group of fashion-conscious young folks who dye their hair green and pink, while wearing torn shirts, dirty jeans and lots of safety pins strung all over them.

Despite the wild only - one - day - till - Christmas - shopping atmosphere, it was really something to see.

The collection, by the way, is the largest, most inclusive Rauschenberg exhibition ever held. It's located on the fourth floor of the museum at the corner of Van Ness and Pine in the city. Hours are Tuesday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., Saturday and Sunday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The exhibit, needless to add, is not - to - be - missed, a collection that's never before been compiled on an artist who has greatly influenced American modern works. It's exuberant, full of wit and political overtones, it's controversial and colorful, and what more could you want? It continues until August 21, so head on over.

But if you're planning on being a big nam in the art world someday, think about it: those millions of autographs, parties, openings and people that demand the time of a well-known artist.

Then, remember the fortune he's making — and get to work.

'Pacific' audition

High school graduates with some experience in musical theater may be interested in an appeal from the Livermore Musical Theatre for a choreographer.

The group plans on staging "South Pacific" under the leadership of producer Charles Jennings, and they're looking for a high school graduate who could add some pizzazz to the show in the dancing area.

Auditions for the production are scheduled for Wednesday, June 29 at 7 p.m. in the Carnegie Building on Fourth Street, Livermore. Show dates are August 18 through 21, and it will be performed in the Livermore High Auditorium. The amateur theatre group is jointly sponsored by Livermore Area Recreation and Park District and the Livermore Cultural

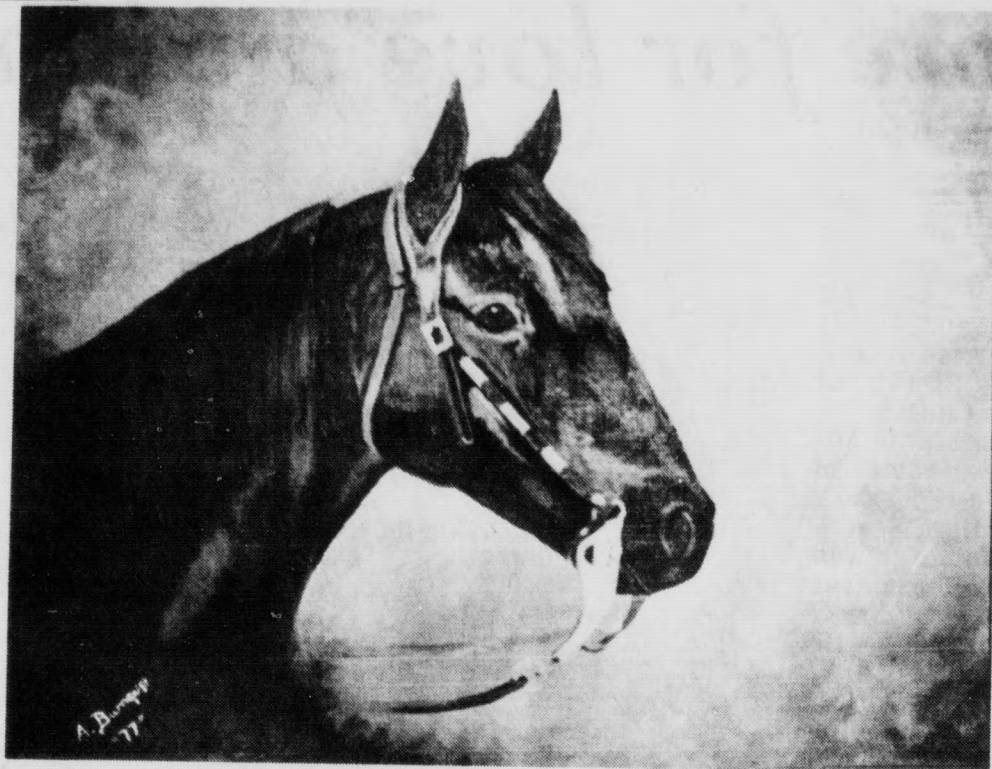

Chabot theater

Jesse White, a familiar face to TV viewers as the "lonely Maytag repairman," will star in the stage comedy, "Never Too Late" at Chabot College on July 22, 23, 29 and 30.

White, a seasoned actor who has appeared in countless television shows and has co-starred in some 53 movies (including "Harvey"), will play a man in his fifties — who learns he is about to become a father again.

The three-act comedy by Arthur Long was originally performed on Broadway by Paul Ford and Maureen O'Sullivan.

The production will be held at 8 p.m. in the Chabot Auditorium Building.

Local scene

Top names headline
Fair entertainment

The biggest "name" performer appearing at the Alameda County Fair now underway in Pleasanton is undoubtedly Jose Feliciano.

An award-winning guitarist, Feliciano is best known for such pop hits as "Light My Fire" and the theme for TV's "Chico and the Man." Possessed of an excellent voice with exceptional phrasing, the diminutive young artist is equally at home in venues such as Las Vegas or on television.

Feliciano debuts tonight at the Fairgrounds Amphitheatre with performances at 7 and 9 p.m. Jose, along with emcee Bob Hart and the Vern Rolle Orchestra, will also perform Thursday at 7 and 9 p.m.

Actually, this year's lineup of talent for fairgoers surpasses all previous years.

Following Jose Feliciano into the Amphitheatre Friday and Saturday will be comics Skiles and Henderson. This is a return engagement for the popular duo who have been seen on television innumerable times and played Tahoe and Vegas.

On July 3 and 4 the popular Treniers, anchored by twins Claude and Cliff, come to Pleasanton.

The Treniers have won the "Best Lounge Act in Las Vegas" award more than a few times. They do a rhythm and rock, dance and instrumental show that'll leave viewers breathless.

Having seen them perform in Vegas to a non-stop tempo for 60 minutes or more, it's hard to believe they've been doing that for almost a quarter century.

"Mr. Tex-Mex," Freddy Fender, will be in on July 5 and 6 backed by the acrobatic Elkin Sisters and emcee Russ Fisher.

Tonight is another half-price "Family Night" with all admissions cut in half after 5 p.m. Family nights are also slated July 5, 6 and 10.

Mark Anderson, a student at Harvest Park School, has been accepted as a student at Forest Meadows Center of the Arts, an interdisciplinary summer study program scheduled July 10 through 31 in San Rafael.

Mark will join other pre-professional musicians and dancers in an intensive three-week program of master classes, workshops, career forums and performances at Dominican College and Marin Civic Ballet School.

Crafts,
art sold

An entire arts and crafts section of 22 booths, featuring arts in action, will be one of the many displays of commercial exhibits this year during the Alameda County Fair, through July 10.

Gates are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. for the fair, which includes displays of more than 300 exhibitors showing their wares. A few of the items to be on the lookout for in the commercial exhibits building will be hand-crafted pool tables, New York Life's electronic display, food dehydrators, geometries, image photo booth and metal etchings.

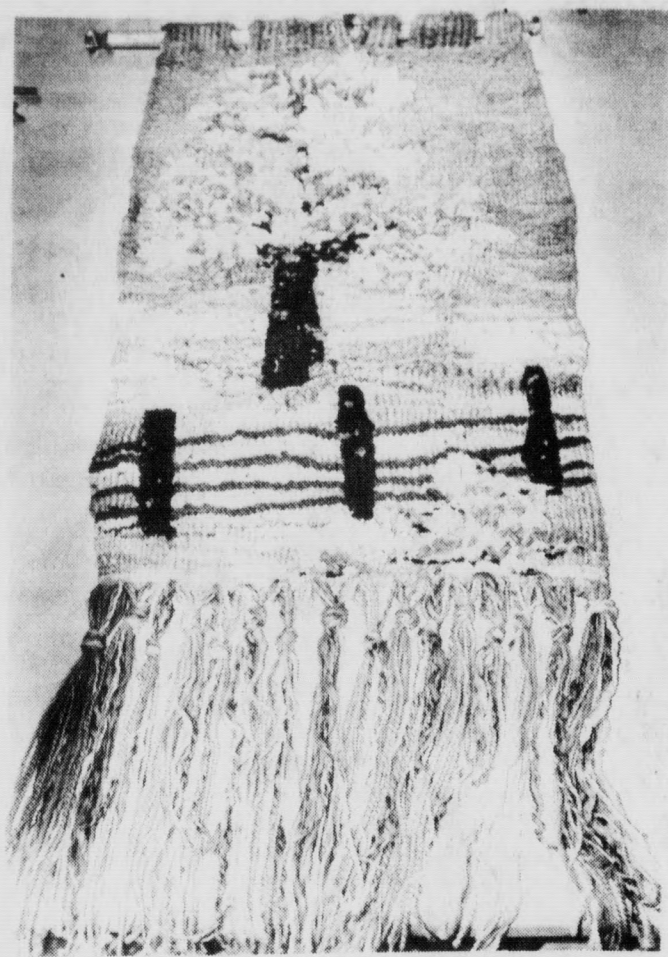

Pavilion

A good evening of jazz sounds comes to the Concord Pavilion in a concert featuring Chuck Mangione and his Quartet Saturday, July 9.

The 8 p.m. performance is a special event of the ninth annual Concord Summer Festival, which is scheduled for the Pavilion for three weekends in July and August.

First prize!

Pleasanton residents scooped up some of the art awards at the Alameda County Fair this year. Annette Burnquist took a blue ribbon in seventh and eighth grade painting, the junior division, for her work shown at left. Annette also received a special award for her entire division, which included sixth grade to high school artists. Veretta Toland of Pleasanton captured the prize for best of show, amateur weaving, with her intricate creation (right). Let's sue!

When the Alameda County Water District filed suit against Livermore and Valley Community Services District to stop those two local agencies from "polluting waters of the Niles Cone," they might have doing residents on this side of that cone a big favor.

If VCSD and Livermore are to be hauled into court over the complicated question of "degrading downstream waters," then it would not be long before City of Pleasanton is dragged into that action... as a "friend of the polluters." From the Altamont to lower San Ramon to the far reaches of Sunol Valley, we are all one in this pollution thing.

That is why the question belongs in court. It might indeed take the Supreme Court of the United States to resolve once and for all the complication of standards and claims and counter claims which abound in the treatment and disposal of liquid wastes.

After 20 years and some $10 million in expenditures related to the sewer question, this basin seems as removed today from any real answer to that question than it ever has been. Worse, in 1977 our people are divided, the stability of local government is threatened, all because of "the sewer mess."

Let Fremont and those other cities served by the ACWD go forward with their suit, and thus give us once and for all clear definition as to who is polluting what; let those troubled Valley residents who still doubt the wisdom of the "Super Sewer Pipeline" then take local government into court, and thereby gain the wisdom of some higher, neutral authority regarding that muddled line.

Given the passions and the politics of sewerism at the local and regional levels, a clear judicial finding might be our last hope to get free of all that sewerage.

Komandorski sewer

After 30 years of skirmishing with the State Legislature, several thousand hours of local effort climaxed by two ballot measures on the question, we are at long last ready to knock down Komandorski Village's ancient walls and replace them with some badly-needed low-income housing units that can be a tribute to this Valley.

But not quite. First the Pleasanton Housing Authority must convince the Valley Community Services District that the new Komandorski is as worthy of sewer service as was the old Komandorski.

And before that can happen, VCSD says it must make its own peace with the United States Army, which sort of controls all of the land north of Interstate 580 and west from Dublin... enveloping that World War II Komandorski Village site.

We couldn't begin to explain here the political ramifications which find the PHA and the VCSD and the USA at odds with each other; but we can assure you that until each of those bureaucratic entities comes to terms (the impasse is over sewers, naturally) there can be little hope of building 150 units of housing for low-income families in the near future.

And if not built darned soon, perhaps it will never be built at all, given the frailties of federal financing.

We appreciate the significance of that VCSD - U.S. Army agreement; we even understand why the VCSD board of directors need some sort of wedge to use against the military power structure.

But please, ladies and gentlemen, don't make 150 low-income families the pawn in your big political game. Get those sewer connections cleared, and get the New Komandorski off the planning boards and into service! It's already 30 years overdue.

Muni workers

There is rejoicing in municipalities up and down the state this week. The California Senate has rejected a measure that would have forced local government to go to compulsory arbitration when there was impasse with muni work forces over wages and working conditions.

Taxpayers might also be gratified with that news; we will be a great deal happier when we learn that local government and local work forces have found ways to work together, with or without some arbitrary outside agent.

There is more to community government than just the settlement of each year's labor contract. Important as a fair wage and reasonable working conditions might be, we like to believe that most of those who come to the smaller cities and villages in search of fulltime employment do so because there is that "something special" here which is not evident in the metropolitan centers.

The big cities have always paid more — be it for the city hall crew or the big corporation's office staff. Suburbia offers lower wages, but considerable benefits in our rural lifestyle, good schools, relatively safe streets and that oh-so-close commute from home to job.

Muni work forces have to also remember that the smaller cities and villages do not have the tax base or the population to allow competition with large urban centers on wages and hours, staffing of fire trucks or assignment of police officers' duties.

We can and must pay fair wages at the suburban level. But we can best do that when municipal employees are understanding in other demands which might be imperative to the big-city employees' union, but that have no place out here in the sticks. And that's another reason we don't need compulsory and binding arbitration.

"IN EVERY MILITARY OPERATION THERE IS BOUND TO BE A FEW CIVILIAN CASUALTIES"

Hindsight/Foresight

Brown's lesson

In little more than five years, the death penalty has been struck down twice by the California Supreme Court, refined by the U.S. Supreme Court, reinstated twice by the state's legislators and overwhelmingly approved in referendum by the state's voters.

Another death penalty measure is wending its way through Sacramento, following Gov. Edmund G. Brown, Jr.'s veto. It passed the Senate by a substantial margin, as in the past, and is now in the Assembly.

Brown's "matter of conscience" reasoning is back for the override vote. It appears likely the Assembly will vote to override as the May vote on the legislation was 54-23. Assemblyman Floyd Mori of Pleasanton was among 31 Democrats voting in favor.

Senator George Deukmejian has said the override vote prospects in the Assembly depend "on whether he fights the override. If he twists arms and exerts all the power and influence of his office, I think he can stop an override."

But Brown, with an eye doubtlessly cast toward election year '78, did little more than reiterate his stand. Deukmejian says "the governor ought to rethink his position. This is the will of the people, the will of the legislature."

Which is exactly right. It has been said that the best way to make enemies out of centrists and demonstrators out of enemies is to rail long and loud on a controversial issue. As stated here before, Brown may have the courage of his convictions but he is no political neophyte. To rail long and loud in opposition to the death penalty would, even if successful in collaring the Assembly, invite a 1978 initiative campaign at the same time he's running for reelection.

For Brown - backers, that's a no-no. There's a lesson to be learned here for opponents and proponents of other controversial issues.

Such as the homosexuals and their hollow "rights" battle. The nature of the issue has not only brought out homosexuals and their supporters but has served to arouse the great majority who are heterosexual, family-oriented and are tired of the hate campaign mounted against individuals such as Anita Bryant.

There is a fine line between demonstrating one's convictions and feelings and ignoring the rights of others, in both these instances the overwhelming majority.

Letters to the Times

Female silliness

Editor, The Times: I hope that others in our community made note of the irresponsible action of Mayor Helen Tirsell as reported in your paper on Wednesday June 22.

Any elected official who would "round-file" a report that cost several hundred, if not thousands of dollars, to prepare should be put on notice that voters will not accept such childish behavior.

I would hope that our mayor could see the fact that it is just such action that causes sexist attitudes, apologize to the area mosquito abatement district, and in the future use adult techniques for dealing with a real problem.

I am sure a simple note to those who offend her honor by referring to the council as gentlemen would help far more than eyeglass twirling female silliness.

Chauvinistically yours,
Tom Frederick
Livermore

(Mayor Tirsell had said she tossed into the wastebasket a report from a county agency that began with the situation: "Gentlemen..." — Editor)

Individual rights

Editor, The Times: The reported circumstances surrounding the arrest of council watcher Paul Tull should raise some concerns in the minds of the people who care for the rights of the individual. His being stopped for "driving too slow" by the "same two officers" who ousted him from the City Council meeting has the appearance (perhaps without a factual basis) of a concerted effort to get him, instead of attending to more serious matters. If Tull is currently on the "enemies list" of the City of Livermore, who will be the next? There is no one on wheels, even bicycles, who cannot be arrested for a violation in a relatively short time, if we can assign the manpower to follow him.

While I can't defend the style of Mr. Tull in meetings or condone anyone using insulting language against the City staff, the proposed ban on the open forum is root an appropriate reaction and neither is the scheduling of an open forum at the end of the meetings. The ban would chip one more limb off the citizens rights and freedom. Let us not forget that not only is freedom indivisible, the care and maintenance of freedom has to be continuous, much like that of our physical, social and other needs. Sometimes I am glad people speak up for me, the ordinary citizen, when I can't even be there in person.

Round the town

Students of American history cannot recall anything like it.

When President Carter volunteered to pay the Internal Revenue Service $6000 in taxes that he was never obligated to pay, Americans everywhere responded to that noble gesture.

President Jim knew that he had no tax liability for 1976, even though his taxable income was $39,366.98 for that same year. Something about "taxes offset entirely by investment credit on storage facilities" at the Carter peanut farm had wiped out President Jim's obligations to Uncle IRS in 1976. But, undaunted by that circumstance, our beloved leader mailed the IRS a $6000 payment anyway... "because it is a duty and a pleasure for any American to support our government."

It is one pleasure that most Americans had not really thought much about, until now.

From Jane Fonda, onetime anti-war activist, came this letter to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: "I realize now that my refusal to pay taxes that would further America's war-mongering pursuits was in truth denying me the pleasure of supporting our beloved government. Please accept my apology, along with my check for $784,968 to cover all past taxes I might have skipped, plus interest."

From Robert Haldeman (No. 6543891) came this heart-rending note to the Bureau of Prisons: "My recent exposure to the nation's penal system makes me realize what a tremendous job wardens and prison guards are going for my country under the most difficult circumstances. I am launching a nation-wide campaign for funds to 'The Wardens and Prison Guards Welfare Fund' and will start that fund with my own $5000 donation gained from the sale of my last book."

Homer T. Bankrupt, a well-known critic of state spending policies, read about President Jim's unselfish gesture and quickly dashed off this note to Governor Edmund G. Brown, Jr.: "The inspiration given us by President Carter cannot be ignored by even the most destitute of Americans. Enclosed please find $12.84 which Mrs. Bankrupt and I earned by returning used aspirin bottles to the Bayer Recycling Center over the past two years. I want you to use this money in any way that will further the cause of California government, including healthy wage increases for yourself and other dedicated politicians." (Governor Brown had to refuse Bankrupt's letter, regrettably, because it did not have sufficient postage.)

From a well-known address in Southern California, a Mr. R. Nixon sent this message to the presidents of three major television networks: "I am convinced the cause of good government would best be served with open debate on the question of presidential pardons and all matters relating thereto. Accordingly, I wish to buy one hour of prime time on all three major networks to provide an opportunity for Americans with views differing from my own to share those views with the nation. If the enclosed check for $1 million does not cover all network expenses, I am certain my friend David Frost will be pleased to make up the balance... for he too is a firm believer in this country's benefits."

Then there was this letter from a Mr. James Earl Ray who is at present a guest of the Commonwealth of Tennessee. Mr. Ray had this to say to the governor of Tennessee: "Recently I had occasion to see two bloodhounds owned by the Tennessee Prison Authority placed into action under most difficult circumstances. As a taxpayer and an American who loves his government, I was thrilled by the devotion to duty shown by those two dogs. Please convey my congratulations to the dog's trainers, most particularly for having fed them just before they took off on that dangerous mission. Very cordially yours..."

There was one response to President Jim's voluntary tax payment which suggests not all Americans were thrilled by that unselfish act. From a prominent Republican who asked that his name be withheld, came this note addressed to the Chairman of Republican Wishful Thinking in 1980: "Whoever thought up that Carter voluntary tax payment scam is a genius! Why don't we have any geniuses on our side?? I have no desire to run against a born-again incumbent who makes paying taxes sound like giving tithe to the Lord. Henceforth all my donations will be directed to the Victims of Presidential Slicers of America. It might really build into something, by 1984..."

The GOP

Although up until now attention has been focused on four other aspiring Republicans seeking to be chosen by their party to contest Governor Jerry Brown's reelection next year, it could be a serious mistake to under-rate Senator John V. Briggs who is coming on strong.

The first spotlights have been on Attorney General Evelle J. Younger who, despite being thought a certainty to run has yet to officially announce, and San Diego Mayor Pete Wilson who has been more positive about his intentions. Two others, L.A. Police Chief Ed Davis and Assemblyman Ken Maddy, are still testing the temperature. Excepting for Wilson none are thumping the drums in a deafening effort.

Briggs, on the other hand, spotting what he thinks is a wide open track has marched in with brass bands as an avowed candidate. The clamor he has made has resulted in grabbing national headlines while the other four momentarily appear to be spectators at a parade.

That he cannot be taken lightly is to be seen in his quick perception of the problem at hand. Actually, it is rather simple. He has to get at least one more Republican vote than any of the others.

It is his execution of his immediate task which warrants weight being given to his candidacy. The way he sees it neither Younger nor Wilson can rally the supporters of Ronald Reagan which make up the core of the party. That is understandable. Both opposed Reagan's challenge of President Gerald Ford for the GOP Presidential nomination last year.

Briggs can't get Reagan's endorsement either, mostly because the former governor is playing it cool, avoiding creating animosities within the party which might haunt him in 1980 if he should seek the Presidency once more. So Briggs has pulled a coup by gaining the support of former Lt. Governor Ed Reinecke.

Reinecke, by his involvement in Watergate and subsequent perjury conviction, later overturned, may not be the greatest asset in a general election but his popularity with the Republicans is undiminished. Aside from Reagan no one can come close to the roars of approval he gets at GOP gatherings.

Briggs is somewhat feisty and at times has a tendency to brashness. But in his eleven years in the Legislature he has shown both persistence and sufficient balance to earn the warm support of business. Although conservative, he has avoided the right wing label and successfully won sufficient Democratic votes to be elected five times to the Assembly, and to the Senate last year.

Having seemingly locked up the important support inside the Republican party, Briggs has set out to capture the hearts of the unaffiliated Republicans. He jumped into the "gay" fracas, going into Florida to support Anita Bryant's efforts in repealing the so-called "gay rights" ordinance. He is following through on that by authoring legislation which would bar homosexuals from jobs in the public schools.

But his big issue will be the death penalty. He made a political faux pas by announcing he would vote against Brown's override so that Brown will have to face the issue when he comes up for reelection. A more prudent politician would have said nothing and ducked the roll call, accomplishing the same result. But Briggs says it is now unimportant whether Brown is overridden or not.

"In its watered down version the bill doesn't provide the protection for the people that they voted better than two to one to have. I am sponsoring an initiative to put the issue before the voters even if Brown is overridden so that California may have a strong death penalty law. It is only proper that the question should be before the voters at the same time Brown stands for reelection."

Dr. Joyce Brothers

DEAR DR. BROTHERS: Possibly my ideas of marriage were too rosy - hued, but I came from a home where my father and mother were devoted to each other and never had a quarrel. Since I've been married (two years) it seems that my husband and I do nothing but argue. He accuses me of being too demanding and a nag; he feels that I blame him for everything that goes wrong. He'll never admit he's at fault, even when I point out instances where he failed to do something or other or assume responsibility. I don't see how our marriage can survive if he won't be more cooperative. — S.K.

DEAR S.K.: As in the tango, it takes two to argue. It sounds to me as though the time has come for you to face reality. Even though you think your parents set the model for an ideal marriage, I would doubt it. More probably they were demonstrative in front of you and reserved any disagreements for private discussion.

You now tend to mold your marriage after that of your parents, and are deeply disappointed that your husband does not measure up. Like most people, you blame the one you love for not living up to expectations. Obviously, your husband is not about to become the epitome of male perfection you contemplated. (And it sounds as though he has reason for more than a little disenchantment.)

Psychotherapist Dr. Martin Shepard advises, expect nothing and you will have no one and nothing to blame. In other words, lower your sights before your husband's inability or desire to change to your specifications builds to an uncompromising impasse. What's more important, your marriage or your idealism?

All too often we condemn others for shortcomings we fear in ourselves. With a bit more tolerance, you might be happier with your husband and he might have less need to call you a nag. He might even begin to adapt to your hopes. It's worth a try.

DEAR DR. BROTHERS: Even though my wife and I have a relatively happy marriage in all respects, I'm greatly tempted to have an affair with my secretary — and the young lady seems more than willing. It's not that I'm attracted to the girl, but I listen to many of the other men talk about their extramarital carrying-on and I feel as though I'm missing out on something. Certainly in this age of sexual revolution there should be no reason for hangups over an occasional affair. Yet that's exactly what is holding me back — I wouldn't want my wife to find out nor would I want the secretary to become too involved. — D.T.

DEAR D.T.: You'd better file away any plans you have for an affair with your secretary. Office romances demand more than 9 to 5 attention and can provide more than casual comment for the water-cooler contingent, some of which could reach home.

Sexual revolution or not, any romantic involvement with your secretary will destroy whatever office relationship you now have. You cannot expect that your present employer - employee status won't be changed by the intimacies of an affair. Even if the girl is not serious or demanding of a commitment, she will certainly look forward to a less formal attitude between you.

Definitely you should stop listening to what the other men are saying about their affairs. Chances are the talk is more macho than actual makeout.

Since you admit you have a "relatively happy marriage," it would seem that a little extra effort on the homefront would bring an increase in the kind of satisfaction you won't get from any casual affair.

Johnny Wonder's QUESTION CORNER

Q. "HOW DO BRAZIL NUTS GROW?"

PHILIP PAYNE FREMONT, CA

A. BRAZIL NUTS GROW ON LARGE EVERGREEN TREES FOUND IN BRAZIL. A DOZEN OR MORE OF THE 3-SIDED NUTS FORM IN TIGHTLY PACKED CLUSTERS WITHIN A HARD, ROUND SEED CASE.

Most of us are familiar with delicious Brazil nuts. When we eat a Brazil nut, we are eating the seed of a large evergreen tree found in the forests of Brazil, which tells us how the Brazil nut got its name.

These three-sided nuts grow in clusters from 12 to 25. They are tightly packed like sections of an orange inside a hard, round shell that resembles a coconut.

The woody outer shell is at least a quarter of an inch thick and is very difficult to open.

It usually takes a year for the nuts to ripen. When ripe, the heavy nut case with the nuts inside crashes to the ground.

Since the trees may be 100 or more feet high, workers who collect the nuts must protect their heads with wooden shields when walking under the trees.

The nut kernels are rich in oil. Oil pressed from Brazil nuts is used for salads, in making soap and for many other uses. The long, straight tree trunks are used for lumber.

The late Harry Merkle of San Francisco was one of the best players on the West Coast. His lead on today's hand was made many years ago, but it still stands as one of the great leads.

North and South were playing a form of the Fishbein convention in which they doubled preemptive bids for business and bid the cheapest minor for takeout. Thus, South's four-club bid was an all-suit takeout of East's three-spade opening.

Merkle bid four spades and North went to five clubs. This left Merkle on lead. It seemed reasonable that his partner would have a singleton in one of the red suits but there was no way for Harry to know which one.

However, he knew his partner would know so he opened the eight of spades. East won the trick and had no problem about what to lead back. He put his singleton diamond on the table.

South won in dummy and led a trump to Harry's ace. Back came a second diamond and East ruffed for a one-trick set.

How to be your own pump jockey

One out of every three gallons of gasoline sold in the U.S. today is pumped by the customer according to the California State Automobile Association (AAA).

With more and more drivers cashing in on lower prices at the "self-serve" pumps it is important for the layman gas station attendant to know some simple tips before manning the pumps.

After entering the service station, be sure your car is close enough to the right pump to avoid making a bad connection with the hose.

Stop the car, set the parking brake, and be sure the ignition switch is off. Put out all cigarettes.

Clear the purchase amount and volume indicators so that both gallons and price read "zero." This is sometimes done by turning the handle as shown in the first photo.

Remove the gas cap and put it where it won't be forgotten or lost. Always re-check before leaving the station to avoid making an unplanned return trip.

Now grasp the nozzle handle and lift it from the bracket-receptacle on the pump. Turn the activating lever to "on". In some cases this same lever clears the price indicator. Some pumps have this assembly on the front, while others have the bracket and switch on the side.

Place the nozzle securely into your gas tank. If the nozzle is equipped with a vapor recovery unit (as shown), be sure that the flat, flexible surface fits snugly around the gas tank opening as in the second photo. This prevents gasoline fumes from escaping into the atmosphere and helps control air pollution.

Squeeze the nozzle trigger, allowing the fuel to flow into your car's tank.

Keep an eye on the indicator to get the amount you want. For fill-ups, a vacuum pressure device inside the nozzle should automatically stop the flow when the tank is filled.

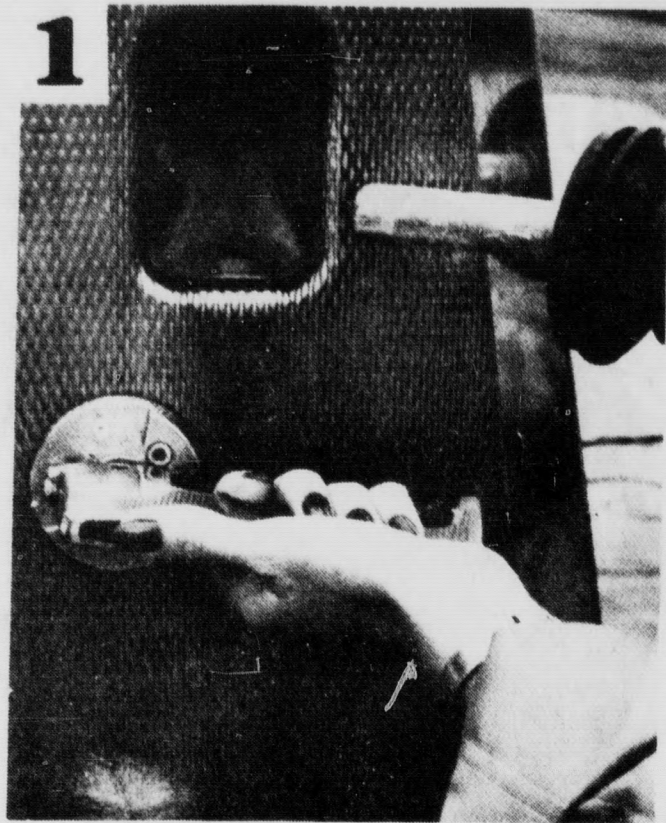

Be cautious of "splashback" and don't top off the tank; it only causes spillage and air pollution.

Now, carefully remove the nozzle, being sure to keep the pipe end pointing upward to avoid spilling. Turn the pump switch back to "off" and replace the entire assembly in the pump.

After getting gas it is always a good idea to check under the hood to see if the oil is low, or the battery or radiator needs water or coolant.

Even the most mechanically unskilled driver can spot an excessively loose fanbelt, corroded battery connection or leaky radiator hose. Tire pressure should be tested when tires are cold.

By performing routine "preventive maintenance," what otherwise might later become an expensive repair bill can often be avoided with little inconvenience and minimum cost.

The three simple steps to pumping your own gas are: (1) Turn the switch to on, (2) fit the nozzle snugly while filling, (3) return the hose to the pump and turn the switch "off."

What were you doing during last weekend's 100-degree days?

Eighty of your neighbors were lolling under the pines at Lake Tahoe, swimming in the crystalline water off Baldwin Beach, fishing for salmon and three kinds of trout in quiet, backcountry ponds.

There was room for 12 more groups of campers last weekend at spacious Camp Shelly, the Livermore Area Recreation and Park District's private campground a few miles north of the South Tahoe fork and a 20-minute drive from the Stateline casinos.

The camp was established in the Fifties when an LARPD general manager by the name of Shelly hammered out a lease with the state for a generous portion of the Mt. Tallac Organizational Tract.

Each year, a group of enthusiasts would put in volunteer labor to clear roads, lay water lines and build by hand the necessary picnic tables and food cabinets and barbecue grills.

From a patch of pine forest, LARPD's leased land has become an exceptionally spacious 26-site campground with flush toilets and hot showers.

At sweeping Baldwin Beach, a mile from camp, water is drinkably pure and about 68 degrees.

This year, Janet and Eric Jacobson are the friendly and hardworking rangers who greet guests, retrieve lost toddlers and do all the maintenance. Both are students at Cal State, Hayward, he working on a master's degree in public administration, she studying outdoor recreation.

Habitués of Tahoe for many years, the Jacobsons are well qualified to point out the best route for climbing 9,000-foot Mt. Tallac, to suggest an easy hike that will take in a waterfall or two, or simply to give directions to the nearest supermarket. Baldwin Beach is a mile from camp. The National Forest Service visitors center, with an exquisite half-mile-long self-guiding trail and a busy program of hikes and talks, is another mile down the road. Reservations, at $2.50 a night for Livermore residents and $5 for out-of-town-ers, should be made at the LARPD office, 71 Trevarno Road, Livermore (447-7300) during weekday business hours. Sorry, folks — the camp is booked for Fourth of July weekend and for the following weekend. On any other dates between now and September, it's all yours.

Trapshoot at gun club

In the Baa

The Livermore/Pleasanton Rod and Gun Club will host the PITA Series 77 Trapshoot at the Club Grounds on July 9 and 10.

There will be six events — 1, 2, and 3 on July 9; and 4, 5, and 6 on July 10. These will be the 100 yd. Targets; the 100 Handicap Targets; and 25 Pair Doubles, each day.

There will be five classes in Events 1 and 2; and four classes in Event 3. Both days will be the same. However, Event 1 will start promptly at 10:00 a.m. on Saturday; and Event 4 will start at 9:30 a.m. Sunday.

There will be some tough competition; so bring your best set of nerves, your gun, and plenty of shells. Twelve-gauge shells are available at the grounds.

Practice traps will open at 9:00 a.m., so you can sign up early. Hope to see you there.

Jim Floyd took his family up to the high country of Yosemite — Tioga Pass area — to do some loafing, fishing, and to get an eleven-thousand-foot aerial for his portable ham radio.

His daughter, Kim, dashed down to the lake, caught some good trout, brought them back to camp, and said, "Hey, Dad, you going to clean these fish?"

Back came the reply from Jim, "Nope, Kim, you caught them, so you clean them."

"Just checking," said Kim; and she set to work. She didn't get discouraged by that, as she did most of the fishing on the trip.

Jim reports his aerial worked fine; and the scenery was wonderful. They had some rain, sleet, snow, lightening, and thunder. At other times, big fleecy white clouds, and blue sky. He recommends the area as a great place for camping.

Have you seen the new over/under manufactured by Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc.? This is a neat looking little 20-gauge. The first of these will have a 26-inch barrel; and 28-inch barrels will be coming out in early 1978. The 12-gauge over/under will appear sometime in the near future. If you like the over/under in 20-gauge, take a look at this one. It is priced at $475.00.

There will be a two-day gun and hobby show at the County Fairgrounds in San Jose on Saturday and Sunday, July 9 and 10. The grounds are located at 344 Tully Road.

Aubrey Seiler recommends trolling now for strippers. He advises using a spreader rig and getting down into the cooler water. Use any bait you think might work. But don't troll too fast. Aubrey says between two and three knots work best for him.

Get those broadheads sharpened up! Archery deer season will open on the coastal area Saturday, July 2. This should please the state's 25,000 to 30,000 bow hunters.

The bag limit is two bucks, forked horn or better, in the season which will continue through July 17.

Archers bagged 431 deer in California last, the Department of Fish and Game reports, on the basis of a count of tags returned by successful hunters. The top early season producer was Mendocino County where 50 bucks were reported taken by bow and arrow.

What is reported to be the largest seven-gill shark to be taken in California waters has been entered in the Fish and Wildlife Award program of the state Fish and Game Commission.

The 303-pound, 7-ounce shark was taken by Emilio E. Volonte of South San Francisco on May 11 from the waters of south San Francisco Bay. The female fish measured 54 inches in length.

Berger C. Benson, commission president, said that the award program provides important biological information for maintenance of long-term records.

Information on the program is available from the commission office at 1416 Ninth St., Sacramento 95814 and regional offices of the DFG.

Winners of the 1977 competition will be named in January, Benson said.

Rangers play roulette

Will new Texas Ranger manager Billy Hunter be struck by lightning in the second game of tonight's double-header?

Will he render himself useless on a wad of chewing tobacco?

Or will he grow homesick of a winning team and return to Baltimore?

Questions such as these must be juggling in Ranger owner Brad Corbett's mind after he hired Hunter as the fifth Texas manager this season.

Hunter, coach of the Orioles since 1964, took over the reins yesterday after signing a two-year contract Monday morning.

Hunter succeeds Connie Ryan, Eddie Stanky, Frank Lucchesi and Pat Corrales in the Texas manager merry-go-round.

Lucchesi opened the season as field general but purportedly became scapegoat for the team's floundering attendance figures. The Rangers were only 4½ games behind front-running Minnesota at the time.

First-base coach Corrales became manager for a few days when Lucchesi was decked by malcontent secondbaseman Lenny Randle.

Lucchesi was sent to the hospital and Randle was sent to the New York Mets.

After Lucchesi got the axe, Eddie Stanky signed a three-year contract in excess of $225,000.

Unable to tolerate the absence of his family, Stanky packed his bags after a victorious debut over the Twins.

Assistant Coach Connie Ryan took over, but his chances of remaining as manager disintegrated when the Rangers dropped three straight to California this past weekend.

Corbett had the opportunity to hire recently fired Frank Robinson or could have saved plane fare by going after former Cardinal skipper and now A's coach Red Schoendienst.

But the paunchy cigar-puffing Texas owner was apparently swayed by Hunter's career with a winning ball-club.

Through the entire mess, the Rangers have fallen back only one more game. The rest in fifth place, but only 5½ games back.

Therefore, the question remains: Is the manager that important?

"Sure he is," offered 10-year outfielder Dave May.

May, a 1973 all-star with Milwaukee, said a team depends on the manager for leadership and discipline.

"That's especially important at this level of play," said the man remembered by trivial freaks as the player traded for Henry Aaron two seasons ago.

May, swapped along with four others from Atlanta for slugger Jeff Burroughs this year, said he hasn't been around long enough to determine why Lucchesi was fired.

"It was probably a mixture of things," he said.

Billy Carter could be manager of the Rangers as far as rookie sensation Elliott "Bump" Willis is concerned.

"Who manages doesn't matter to me personally," said the 25-year-old son of the former base stealing king. "I've never had trouble with any of my managers."

Willis, lacking the speed of his father but much more powerful, believed Lucchesi was relieved of his duties because of the bad press he received.

"We always got along," Willis said. Of his newest manager, Willis said, "All I know is that he was coach of Baltimore."

Hockey to return to area?

EDMONTON — A former National Hockey League general manager said Tuesday a new hockey league, to be called the Pacific Hockey League, will be formed in the fall in major cities in the western United States.

Chuck Catto of Montreal, former general manager of St. Louis Blues of the NHL and a former official of the World Hockey Association, said teams will be formed in San Diego, Long Beach, San Francisco, Fresno and Sacramento, Calif., and Las Vegas, Nev.

Possible alternate franchises could be established at Portland, Ore., Seattle or Tacoma, Wash., or Tucson, Ariz., if any of the six initial franchises do not get off the ground, Catto said. Catto, who will be the new league's director of player personnel, said Peter Graham, owner of the San Diego arena, and Dennis Murphy of Fullerton, Calif., former president of the WHA, are primary backers of the new circuit.

Ron Ingram, general manager of the recently folded San Diego Mariners of the WHA, and Terry Slater, former coach of Cincinnati Stingers of the WHA, also will be involved in the organization.

Catto said low maximum salaries would be established.

"I don't think we would have any trouble coming up with players," he said. "We would use a lot of college boys from the United States and Canada and we might get a lot of draft choices from the two big leagues in the sixth or seventh round because the way things are, those kids might not even be invited to training camp."

He said Jim Browitt of Indianapolis, a former vice-president of the WHA, is under consideration as league president.

"We've got some good people," said Catto. "We wouldn't need a lot of big crowds to pay our bills and it would give young kids a chance to develop in a pretty good league."

Walnut Creek edges Falcons

Bruce Wagner sank a free throw in sudden death second overtime to give Walnut Creek a thrilling 52-51 victory over Pleasanton-Foothill in Pleasanton Recreation-Alled Brokers Summer Basketball League action last night at the Valley High school.

The loss gave Pleasanton-Foothill a 1-3 record in Allied Brokers play this season.

After Kevin Haraughty of Pleasanton sent the game into sudden death overtime with a 15-foot jumper with 20 seconds left in the final extra quarter, Walnut Creek controlled the opening tip and worked the ball in for a good shot before Wagner was fouled by Pleasanton-Foothill.

Haraughty, who tallied 12 points for the Falcons, sent the game into the first overtime, hitting two clutch free throws with less than 1:00 remaining.

The lead changed hands throughout the entire game.

Walnut Creek grabbed a 50-10 advantage at the first quarter break, but the Falcons came back strong in the second period as Rick Rosenbach canned eight of his game-high 14 points to give them a 25-23 halftime lead. Rosenbach and Haraughty were constantly hitting from the outside throughout the second period and the Falcons forced Walnut Creek into several turnovers.

The third period was a classic example of two evenly-balanced teams.

Walnut Creek outscored the Falcons 14-12 in the second period, as John Deigan swished the nets for eight points to lead the Spartan charge.

Each team traded baskets in the fourth quarter identically, tallying ten points apiece.

Deigan and Haraughty staged a two-man battle in that quarter. Haraughty hit for six points, while Deigan had four. The Spartan also played an excellent defensive game.

In the evening's first game, Hayward defeated San Ramon 65-34, as the Mariners remained undefeated in Brokers play.

Hayward jumped out to a 6-0 lead on Al Toney's steal and jump shot with 5:10 left in the first period and never trailed.

Hayward led 14-4 at the first quarter break, 35-15 at halftime and 44-27 after the third period.

San Ramon scored only one field goal in the final quarter, that tallied by Chuck Cary.

Cary led the Grizzlies with ten markers. No other San Ramon player scored more than four points. Play-making guard Rich Contreas and Tony Beville shared scoring honors for Hayward, each canning 13 points. San Ramon is now 1-2 in Brokers action.

In action Monday night Pleasanton rolled over Danville 53-37, Fremont topped Pleasanton Foothill 47-39 and Newark topped Hayward 45-38.

Rick Howard canned 18 points to spark Pleasanton's win over Danville. Chris Kearns added 11 and Rob Santos nine.

Dave Ditzell led the losers with nine points.

Phil Moore led Pleasanton Foothill with 12 points and Kevin Haraughty added 11. Tim Emanuel had 11 points for the winners. Marty Mills added 10. Ace guard Tim Henning was held to six points.

Pleasanton Foothill scored 18 points in a fourth-quarter rally but Fremont's early advantage was too much to overcome.

Cauthen's big day

NEW YORK (AP) — In the continuing adventures of Steve Cauthen, boy-jockey from Walton, Ky., it was another big day.

The 17-year-old riding sensation lost his "bug" but won a race at Belmont Park on Monday and launched himself on a new sideline — promoting sales of his own Country-Western record entitled "And Steve Cauthen Sings, Too."

Cauthen's apprentice era ended at Belmont Park as he completed his first full year of racing, thus losing his five-pound allowance — or "bug." Starting today, he'll be on equal weight terms with the other jock-eyes.

He rode one winner in four mounts on his final day as an apprentice, completing a year that brought him from obscurity to national acclaim. He has won 284 races this year with purses totaling approximately $3,050,000.

What elderly want to know about taxes

SACRAMENTO — As a courtesy to senior citizens, the state franchise tax board has prepared answers to most frequently asked questions concerning Senior Citizens Property Tax Assistance or the new Senior Citizens Rent Assistance.

Common Situations: My total household income last year was $5,300. My property taxes were $342. Would it pay for me to file a Senior Citizens Property Tax Assistance claim?

If you filed a claim, you would be entitled to a refund of your property taxes in the amount of $236.

I am a 65 year old renter. My total household income last year was $3,100. How do I figure my rent assistance refund?

Reimbursement is based on your total household income. If you refer to the Rent Assistance Schedule on the back of the claim form, you will note that if household income was greater than $3,000 but not more than $3,200 you are entitled to $99 assistance.

If I file for property tax assistance, will a lien be placed on my property?

Absolutely not. The Senior Citizens Property Tax Assistance Law was enacted to help elderly persons keep their homes. There is no obligation for repayment of a valid claim.

I didn't receive a Senior Citizens Property Tax Assistance claim form in the mail. What should I do?

Call or visit your local Franchise Tax Board office to obtain forms. Check your telephone directory under "California, State of."

Also, you can write to Senior Citizens Programs,

Only once each year. The filing season this year begins May 16, 1977 and ends August 31, 1977. Persons who file more than once may cause a delay of up to six weeks before receiving their proper reimbursement check.

I forgot to include my property tax bill with my claim form when I filed it. What should I do?

The Franchise Tax Board suggests that you wait and forward it when Carter nod near on billions for B-1 bomber?

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The House voted Tuesday to approve construction of the controversial B-1 bomber as President Carter prepared to announce his decision later in the week on whether to approve production. The vote was 243-178. Carter's announcement was expected Thursday.

The Lawrence Livermore Laboratory is currently designing a bomb which could be dropped from the B-1 and other advanced aircraft. A spokesman said cessation of the B-1 program would not affect the Lab.

House Appropriations Committee Chairman George H. Mahon (D-Texas) predicted Carter will decide to put the plane into production, partly as a bargaining chip in the U.S. - Soviet arms limitation talks.

The House rejected an amendment by Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo (D-New York) to chop all $1.4 billion production money for the B-1 out of a $110.6 billion defense appropriation bill.

Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, who has been critical of some defense programs in the past, stayed out of the debate but told newsmen he supported putting the B-1 into production.

"We should go into the SALT strategic arms limitations talks with strength," O'Neill said.

House opponents contended the $24.8 billion program is for 240 B-1 bombers that will be obsolete when they start flying in the late 1980s. But backers denied this and said the bomber is needed in addition to missiles to deter nuclear war.

Rep. Robert K. Dornan (R-Calif.) said the Soviets should know that just one B-1 bomber would have enough nuclear fire power to wipe out 48 Soviet cities if the Soviets launched a nuclear war.

"What we're trying to do is keep the Soviets off guard," Dornan said, "so they will not kill our women and children."

But Rep. Tom Downey (D-New York) said the Soviets will have the capability by the time the B-1 substantially replaces B-52 bombers to shoot the planes down before they can destroy anything.

"We're going to spend $22 billion on a weapon that by the 1990s is going to be obsolete and that is obscene," he said.

Grievance hearing dates have been set for July 12, 13, 25, 26 and 27 at the Lab. A three-member hearing panel has been established, composed of Melville McClelland and Robert Barker, both division heads, and John Miskel, a nuclear chemist.

Szabo had requested the hearings be open, but under established guidelines, both parties must agree. The Lab wants the hearings closed.

He claims that management directed him to design the computer system without being allowed to determine user requirements. "It's like designing a dress without seeing the animal that will wear it," he said.

The computer scientist says he has not received many documents he requested for preparation of his defense. These include time cards and progress reports to subcontractors he says will prove he was doing a satisfactory job.

Those scheduled to appear at the closed hearing include Szabo and his lawyer Tom Sinclair, the UC counsel, Alice Youmans, and the three - member hearing panel.

Szabo says he plans to call 40 witnesses, and estimates that an additional 15 days of hearings will have to be scheduled.

Fired lab staffer loses court try

LIVERMORE — Szilard Szabo, fighting to open his grievance hearing with the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory to the public, lost his first court test this week.

Formerly head of a 10-person group attempting to design a computer language system, Szabo was fired in September, 1975 for alleged unsatisfactory performance and questionable activities.

The 35-year-old Szabo argues that the firing was due to an alleged cover-up of poor management practices which he claims cost taxpayers more than $1 million during the design period.

Szabo was to begin a closed grievance hearing with Lab management in February, but took the matter to court trying to force open hearings. He also asked that regents of the University of California be forced to subpoena witnesses in his behalf who otherwise might refuse to testify due to their relationship with LLL.

Livermore OK's parade on July 4

LIVERMORE — The funky, joyful Fourth of July parade which traditionally straggles through the May Nissen Park neighborhood around lunchtime has been rescued from threatened oblivion.

The city council Monday night suspended their regular rules to take immediate action on a request from Doug Bell, Livermore Area Recreation and Park District (LARP) supervisor, to allow LARP to sponsor the parade. Bell had heard the city's Community Affairs Committee would not be backing the event this year. Getting their non-motorized floats ready for the parade had always been a central activity in LARP's playground programs throughout the city and the staff were dismayed at the thought of canceling this year's fun.

Last year's Bicentennial parade featured such entries as former LARP director John Stroud and his wife dressed like Indians in war paint, carrying a cardboard ship and tossing out tea bags along the route. "The Boston Tea Party, of course," Stroud explained when asked.

It costs nothing to enter the parade. Last year, every group who entered was awarded a ribbon by LARP. Those who completed the six - block route received certificates as well.

This year's parade assembles at Rincon School at 10 a.m. Entries may include hand - pulled floats, bicycle groups, marching groups and individuals in costume. The parade will begin at Rincon School and move along Rincon Avenue to May Nissen Park.

The parade will be only the beginning of day - long community fun in Livermore. The Jaycees' annual Big Wheel Race begins at 11:30 a.m. at Marilyn School, just behind May Nissen Park.

Afterwards, everyone is invited to bring a picnic or buy refreshments at the park.

Red Cross has new directors

The Oakland - South Alameda County Chapter of the American Red Cross will battle inflation and the challenge of meeting increasing human needs at its first meeting of the fiscal year July 22.

The board oversees 12 major programs in Alameda County, and four service centers located in Livermore, Hayward, Fremont and Oakland.

Arthur Flega, former mayor of Piedmont, is the newly elected chairman of the local Red Cross chapter. He was also active on the executive committee of the Greater East Bay Goodwill Industries.

Sharon Hogan of Livermore has been selected as new regional chairperson of the Twin Valley Region. Elbert Alston heads up the Metropolitan Oakland Region, Diane Greer Mason of Hayward chairs the Central Region, and Shirley Wein of Fremont chairs the Washington Township Region.

The eight officers and 52 members of the board will meet July 22 to find ways to beat the gap between expected income, including United Way funds, and the rising costs of doing business.

BFGoodrich's famous nonblimp has become one of the most successful advertising efforts in history, according to a company marketing expert.

The most famous blimp that never was AKRON, Ohio — This is the story of three blimps; one that was built but never flew; one that flew but never landed; and one that never existed at all, but is much more famous than the other two.

The blimp that never flew was the first blimp ever built for the U.S. Navy, in 1914. Designated the DN-1 (for Dirigible, Non-rigid, No. 1), the nation's first blimp was a colossal design failure.

It was too heavy to get off the ground and its engines weren't powerful enough to move it even if it could have become airborne.

The blimp that never landed was built by BFGoodrich, in 1917. According to the U.S. Naval Archives, this blimp was last seen in the Great Lakes in 1919. No one knows what became of it.

The most famous blimp is, of course, the non blimp of the BFGoodrich Tire Division commercials.

Launched in 1973 when BFG wanted the public to understand the difference between Goodrich and Goodyear, the Goodrich "We're the other guys" campaign has been one of the most successful advertising efforts in history, according to Philip F. Jacques, director of marketing communications, BFGoodrich Tire Division.

The story of all three blimps begins in 1914 as the Allied forces realize the threat posed to shipping by the Kaiser's submarine forces. Europe's lifeline stretches tenuously across the deep waters of the North Atlantic.

If the submarines are successful, England and the troops will be cut off from the food and materials necessary to fight the war.

The Allied commanders decide the non-rigid airships, capable of long over-water flights, are needed to search for the submarines and call in naval vessels to fight them. In the United States, specifications were drawn up for these lighter-than-air craft, and the Connecticut Aircraft Company undertook construction of a prototype.

The contract, number 23681, was let at a cost of $45,636.25.

According to Robert K. Smith, writing in "Inventory of Air Ships," 1965, "The specifications were terribly overdrawn, calling for such novelties as bow mooring, and swivelling propellers for vertical thrust.

"As originally built the control car was so heavy that the airship could not possibly have gotten off the ground, and it had to be redesigned from start to finish."

The redesigned airship, designated A-1, eventually made three short test flights, but, according to Smith, "She flew, but proved to be a terrible disappointment."

Convinced that the contractor had acted in good faith, (in fact, it appears that he lost money on her) the Secretary of the Navy formally accepted the DN-1 (A-1) on May 16, 1917.

However, its performance and potential for improvement were so poor, that despite its unique status as the one-and-only in the arsenal, the DN-1 was stricken from service shortly thereafter.

Thus ends the story of the blimp that never flew.

According to U.S. Navy Commander and architect Jerome C. Hunsaker, chief constructor, Admiral David W. Taylor felt the Navy department had been humiliated by the failure of the DN-1, and he therefore decided to take personal charge of future airship procurement.

Design studies were prepared during the summer of 1916, a happy circumstance that coincided with the development of workable blimps in England.

The Royal Navy, operating under considerably more stress and sense of urgency than the U.S. Naval Department, developed a small non-rigid airship in 1916 that suspended the fuselage of a small fighter aircraft underneath the envelope of the "balloon."

This was the SS Sea Scout type blimp, which was perhaps the world's first workable non-rigid airship capable of independent movement.

The U.S. Naval Department's designs were quickly modified to include the new information brought by Lt. John Towers, who "discovered" the English blimp concept. On Jan. 6, 1917, Admiral Taylor submitted the new plans to the Secretary of the Navy.

The first BFGoodrich blimp, B-10, was commissioned Sept. 11, 1917, after extensive and secret night flight testing over Lake Michigan. It served until being severely damaged in a windstorm on Dec. 12, 1918, requiring complete replacement of the gas envelope.

On March 4, 1919, it was stricken from the records to be recommissioned following major repairs as the B-13. On Oct. 30, 1919, B-13 was stricken from the records to be recommissioned following major repairs as the B-13.

But was that the end? On Dec. 16, 1919, the Naval Department logged B-10/13 as serving in the Great Lakes "for instruction."

There are no entries explaining what later became of it. Perhaps it's still there.

One thing is known for sure. The most famous blimp of the three is still in the air; on television, Jacques says.

An unidentified airship photographed in 1918. Could this be the missing BFGoodrich blimp?

Old Fangled Notion #2

Protein for pennies.

Back in the 1890's, when S&W got started, beans were a staple part of just about every family's diet. Nowadays, nutritionists understand more about why beans satisfy. Penny for penny, beans can give you twice as much protein as meat. Just remember to include some milk, cheese or eggs in the meal. Together, beans and dairy products give you the complementary amino acids you need for complete protein.

With a hearty S&W bean casserole tonight, you'll save enough to have prime rib tomorrow.

Brown names prof to supreme court

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. Tuesday nominated Frank Newman, a University of California law professor, to be his third appointment to the California Supreme Court.

The 59-year-old Newman, a professor of international law at Boalt Hall at UC Berkeley, replaces Justice Marshall F. McComb, who was forced to step down by a judicial review commission.

Newman's appointment is subject to confirmation by the Commission on Judicial Appointments, composed of a state appeals court judge, the attorney general and the chief justice.

The appointment of Newman, an Orinda resident, follows by several months the Democratic governor's appointment of Rose Bird, his Agriculture and Services Agency secretary, as chief justice.

At the same time, Brown appointed Wiley Manuel, a black Municipal Court judge from Oakland, to another vacancy on the bench.

No corporate interest for original drama

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Last October, a series called "Visions" began on public TV. Its intent: To encourage original drama for TV and give new-to-TV American writers a showcase for their wares.

Fourteen shows later, with 10 new ones ready for next fall, "Visions" chief Barbara Schultz already is getting set for season No. 3 — but with only enough lot for six fresh productions.

The problem: She and producing station KCET here haven't been able to find corporate underwriters for the series, even though there's no lack of them for made-in-Britain shows.

The money for two seasons — $7 million total — has come from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the Ford Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts NEA.

And while nothing's signed and sealed yet, she says, CPB will be kicking in $1 million and Ford and NEA $500,000; each for the series' third season.

Why no corporate interest in "Visions"? "I wish I could answer that," she said by phone from New York, where she's mulling story submissions. "Apparently, they don't feel it's good for their image, or it's too risky. I just don't know."

She says she's puzzled, "because after last season, when we were so very well received by critics we thought we'd get some interest from a corporation or two. But we didn't."

The corporate till-keepers KCET approved said they loved the series, she added, but either said "it wasn't for them" or that they'd already committed their public TV funds elsewhere.

Oddly enough, when "Visions" was winding up its first season, another public TV series, the six-program "The American Short Story," then came on, a series also made in America and funded by NEA.

Might this signal a gradual shift in public TV programming from heavy reliance on British Broadcasting Corp. and other English wares?

"No, I don't think so," Ms. Schultz said. "I've got to be very honest, sometimes I feel we're an affiliated station of the BBC. I don't mean to sound sour grapes because they do wonderful stuff."

"But it gets a little tiresome at times."

Despite no corporate backing for "Visions," Ms. Schultz said she's at least gratified for its good reviews and the commercial work it helped get for several of its new-to-television dramatists.

She ticked them off — Conrad Bromberg, whose "Two Brothers" was the series' first show; David Epstein, author of "Pennsylvania Lynch," and Nell Cox, writer-director of "Lisa's Pioneer Diary."

It proved a good forum for these and other playwrights, she said.

"I feel that's why it's so important for this project to have a life, to continue," added Ms. Schultz, executive producer of CBS Playhouse in the so-called golden era of original TV drama. "The good writers are there, they should be allowed to work, to write what's on their mind. It's the only way we're going to develop for TV a good body of American work and American writers."

Father Walton debuts his theatre on TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In 1975, Ralph Waite, the father on "The Waltons," took a big chunk of his TV earnings, located a beatup theater here in an area not frequented by Beautiful People, and leased the joint.

And thus began his Los Angeles Actors' Theater.

Last week in many areas, he's on public TV in his troupe's version of Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Godot." It's in the fine arts series that PBS stations and Exxon, the oil company, have bankrolled.

Waite is an unlikely prospect for a theater-funder. Now 49, he didn't attend his first acting class until he was 32.

A recovered alcoholic, he'd previously been an ordained minister, a Yale Divinity School Graduate and before that a social worker.

And Hollywood's an unlikely place to start a theater, the legend goes. But not for Waite, who did much of his early acting for Joseph Papp, New York's fiery off-Broadway theater founder.

Waite, a tall, pleasant man from White Plains, N.Y., said he wasn't finding much of his TV work here fulfilling. After each "Waltons" season, he'd rush back to New York, back to the stage and his friends there.

Then, after he finally bought a home here, it dawned on him that many of his New York colleagues had migrated here. And, he said, he thought: Why not rent a theater and put on quality plays?

Unique antique farm pieces shown at fair

The Oakland Museum's giant steam-powered traction engine will be on view at the Alameda County Fairgrounds through July 10.

In addition, the Daniel Best Company's 1902 farm implement will be fired up from 2 to 4 p.m. on the following dates: Wednesday, June 29; Saturday, July 2; Sunday, July 3; Monday, July 4; Saturday, July 9, and Sunday, July 10.

Best's 10-ton, 18 foot tall Engine No. 185, which was restored over a two-year period by the museum's history department, will be a future permanent exhibit in the museum's garden area.

Restoration was completed in January, 1977, when the engine was publicly steamed up after 40 years of standing idle.

The machine was used by a series of lumber mills until 1930 when it was placed a tourist attraction in front of a Shasta County resort. The engine was then returned to a Caterpillar Tractor Co. Bay Area location, a company founded in 1925 by the merger of the Best and Holt firms.

For further information call the museum's history department at 273-3842.
